WELCOME, HAKOAH!

By Rabbi Ferdinand M. Isserman

The Hakoah Jewish soccer football team of Vienna, internationally famous, which last year met and defeated the leading teams of the United States, will make its initial appearance in Toronto on the morning of May 24. Wherever the Hakoah team has gone it has aroused the wildest enthusiasm. Huge crowds have acclaimed it. At some of its games it drew audiences of from forty to fifty thousand—when the average soccer audience is less than five thousand. Governors and mayors have joined in welcoming this Jewish team. The Jewish communities of New York, Philadelphia and Chicago have feted and enthusiastically supported them.

Toronto Jewry will not lag behind the Jewries of American cities in its welcome to these Jewish athletes. It will turn out en masse to greet these young men whose clean and skilful playing has given the Jew a new status in the athletic world. The appearance of the Hakoah in Toronto will be their first in Canada. We hope it will be a memorable one.

BRAVO, MONTREAL!

The community of Montreal had planned to raise adequate funds to put all of its hospitals on secure foundations. To the meetings when this campaign was being discussed, no Jews had been invited. Responding to the call of a few Jewish leaders, one hundred and fifty men gathered in the Montefiore Club, and following the generous lead of Mark Workman pledged more than one hundred thousand dollars to the city hospital fund. At the first luncheon meeting of the campaign Mark Workman addressed the assembled workers in words that are indeed memorable: "We Jews feel hurt that we were not called in to do our share for this cause. We want it understood that although in religion we are separate, in all other matters we want to be considered as integral parts of the community." Mr. Workman's words and the announcement of the Jewish community's contribution which was still incomplete brought forth generous applause. We congratulate the Montreal Jewish leaders for having given this clear demonstration of the Torah in action. They have once more told our Christian neighbours what they too often forget, that the Jew is anxious, eager and willing to do his share of the communal work and to bear his allotment of communal responsibility, and even more than his share. In all cases where civic leaders grumble about the Jews' non-participation in community enterprises they have only themselves to blame. The Jew is ready to serve, but too often he is ignored. We are glad that the Montreal Jews, though ignored, did not sulk in their tents, but came forward in their own initiative to help a worthy cause. To our Christian neighbours, we say again that the Jew will gladly do what he can for his community, if given the chance. The Jew considers himself an integral part of Canadian life to which he is giving of his spirit, of his ability and of his means.

JEWISH NATIONALISM IN A POLITICAL ISSUE

The Jewish community of Montreal is now confronted with an interesting situation arising out of the provincial election campaign now raging in Quebec province.

Two favourite sons, equally prominent in the community, are fighting each other for a seat in the legislature in the same electoral riding. Both are the official candidates of their respective parties.

In addition to the general issues of the campaign which are supposed to determine the favour of the public for one or other of the parties, there has been introduced a specifically Jewish aspect. The problem of public school education for the Jewish children of Montreal has been dressed up in a political garb and it is now bidden to do service in this campaign. The Jewish voters are presumed to be so intelligent and competent that they can make their ballots perform the double service of deciding Jewish issues as well as selecting between the Liberal and the Conservative parties.

The supporters of the candidate who favours Jewish separate schools have gone so far as to characterize this political campaign as a sort of holy crusade on behalf of Jewish nationalism. They have sent out propaganda to the Yiddish press in New York giving the impression that in Montreal we are witnessing the birth of a Jewish national "bloc" in politics after the fashion of the Jewish "blocs" in the Polish Sejm. Even so keen an observer as our friend Reuben Brainin has been hoodwinked into believing that the struggle between politicians in Montreal is a struggle between ideas. No doubt in calmer moments of reflection, he will regret his lapse from dignity in stepping on a platform of politicians.

We are not anxious to enter into the discussion of political issues. It is one of the rules of this journal not to interfere in politics, recognizing that its sphere of interest is limited to the zone of Jewish concerns. But this campaign has a Jewish side. And we are constrained to evaluate the significance of the Jewish phase.

Is there really a Jewish issue in this campaign?

In this instance we can dismiss the factors of the Jewish personnel. Ordinarily, we are aware, many Jews believe that it is their duty to support Jewish candidates merely because they are Jews. It would be gratuitous now to discuss the soundness or unsoundness of such an attitude. Here both candidates are Jews, and the consideration of mere Jewishness does not count.

What differentiates this campaign from ordinary campaigns is the fact that a Jewish candidate has introduced a certain Jewish question as an issue. We are asked to believe that this one question is of such paramount importance as to deserve to be the deciding factor in the exercise of the vote.

Now there are two ways of estimating the value of an issue in a campaign.

First, there is the question of the quantitative relation of one issue to the mass of issues and problems which are at stake and the degree of attention it will receive as compared with the others.

In the province of Quebec there are the two major parties with their own issues or lack of issues. The legislature will consist of a

OF THE CANDIDATES RUNNING IN THE FORTHCOMING PROVINCIAL ELECTIONS, FEW ARE BETTER KNOW TO MONTREALERS THAN MR. ERNEST W. SAYER, WHO IS OFFERING HIMSELF FOR RE-ELECTION IN ST. LAWRENCE DIVISION.

WELL KNOWN IN BUSINESS CIRCLES AS AN ELECTRICAL CONTRACTOR AND IN SPORT CIRCLES AS A MEMBER OF THE M.A.A.A. AND ST. LAWRENCE CURLING CLUB, HIS FIRST APPEARANCE IN THE POLITICAL ARENA WAS AS ALDERMAN OF THE CITY OF OUTREMONT, WITH THE ENVIABLE RECORD OF BEING ELECTED FOUR TIMES BY ACCLAMATION.

IN THE ELECTIONS OF 1923 HE WAS SENT TO THE QUEBEC PROVINCIAL LEGISLATURE AS REPRESENTATIVE FOR ST. LAWRENCE DIVISION.

HE IS KNOWN TO THOUSANDS OF MONTREALERS AS A BROAD-MINDED, TOLERANT MAN WHO, NEVERTHELESS, IS AGGRESSIVE WHERE THE INTERESTS OF HIS ELECTORS ARE CONCERNED. PARTICULARLY IS THIS TRUE INSOFAR AS HIS WORK FOR THE JEWISH CITIZENS OF ST. LAWRENCE IS CONCERNED, HIS ATTITUDE ON THE SCHOOL QUESTION HAVING GAINED HIM MANY FRIENDS.

BORN IN 1876, MR. SAYER IS IN THE PRIME OF LIFE AND CAN ALWAYS BE DEPENDED UPON TO MAKE AN AGGRESSIVE FIGHT FOR ANY CAUSE IN WHICH HE INTERESTS HIMSELF.

GEO. D. CURRY, D.C., PH.C.

DEAR SIR: I BELIEVE SOME CREDIT IS DUE YOU SINCE I NOW ENJOY GOOD HEALTH AND ONCE MORE FEEL THAT LIFE IS WORTH LIVING. THE TREATMENTS YOU HAVE GIVEN ME HAVE BEEN OF TREMENDOUS BENEFIT TO ME, BECAUSE I AM BETTER AND BELIEVE I AM CURED PERMANENTLY. THE OLD AILMENTS AND SYMPTOMS HAVE NOT RETURNED. I AM EATING AS I USED TO SIX OR SEVEN YEARS AGO, THAT IS EATING EVERYTHING THAT I WISH FOR WITHOUT SUFFERING WITH CHRONIC INDIGESTION, OR VOMITING, OR STOMACH ACIDITY AFTERWARDS. MY NERVES ARE NOW STEADY, WHICH MEANS BETTER. I AM GRADUALLY GAINING IN WEIGHT, ALSO GETTING BACK MY VITALITY, WITH RENEWED STRENGTH AND AMBITION—NO MORE GAS BELCHING AND NO MORE DROWSY SPELLS. YOU WILL UNDERSTAND HOW GRATEFUL I AM TO BE WELL AGAIN AND ABLE TO WORK EVERY DAY, AFTER BEING IDLE, PRACTICALLY AN INVALID, FOR TWENTY-EIGHT MONTHS. MEDICINE DID NOT CURE ME, AND FOOD ONLY AGGRAVATED MY CASE. IN CONCLUSION, I THANK YOU ONCE MORE AND OFFER YOU THE ABOVE AS A CREDENTIAL TO USE AS YOU SEE FIT, IF YOU SO WISH, AND BELIEVE ME,

FRANK GAMACHE,

large number of members. The Jewish member will sit there as a follower of one of the parties. He will be absorbed in the affairs of the party. The Jewish issue will occupy a small place in the economy of his activities as compared with the general round of interests incidental to his office and party allegiance. He may bring up the Jewish question once during his term of office. The ratio of importanre of the Jewish question to the mass of other concerns will therefore be infinitesimal.

Secondly: Consider the qualitative value of the Jewish issue as a factor in the political philosophy of its sponsor.

It is conceivable that any single issue may be quantitatively small as compared with the mass of issues that occupy the attention of parliament as a whole. That same issue may, however, be qualitatively fundamental in shaping the political character of the sponsor.

Concretely speaking, if we had a Jewish candidate who ran as an out-and-out Jewish candidate without any other party affiliation, then his candidature would be Jewish not only as a matter of degree, but as a matter of kind. One socialist in parliament can form a socialist party, and his socialist platform can have behind it the concentrated force of an unwavering party. Similarly, if the Jewish situation in Canada were such as to require a consistent presentation of the Jewish point of view, then there would be urgent need of a Jewish party in parliament—even if it were a party of one.

One Jew is running against another Jew. One is Conservative; the other is Liberal. One has one point of view in relation to the Jewish school question; the other has another point of view. Avowal of belief in either point of view will not make the follower of the Conservative party or of the Liberal party an exponent of a Jewish party. Jewish politicians love the comfort and security of their party affiliation too well.

The question of Jewish schools is not a political question. The Jewish public is far from being unanimous on the subject. A great deal of propaganda and educational effort is required among the Jews themselves to make them understand the possibilities of Jewish education in Quebec. No one has a right to go before the non-Jewish public and pose as the representative of the Jewish point of view. We have no Jewish instrumentality for determining the Jewish attitude towards any question. If we had a Jewish congress, we might have a means for formulating a representative Jewish point of view. Any individual has a right to seek to win over the Jewish public to his way of thinking in any Jewish subject. No individual has a right to speak to the non-Jewish world as the spokesman of the Jews on a topic of a debatable character.

Let politicians fight their political battles to their hearts' content. We wish them all luck. They have no right, however, to drag Jewish topics into the arena of politics. Representation implies responsibility and accountability. anyone claiming to represent the Jews as Jews must be prepared to be accountable to a Jewish electorate organized to give power and receive responsibility. We have no such organized electorate. And so long as a candidate bears responsibility to a political party he should look for support to his party and its adherents.

The Jewish candidates in Montreal are worthy candidates. They are candidates of the two political parties. Jews will vote for them as members of the respective parties. The Jews are not prepared to act as a Jewish party to elect representatives under its own banner. Candidates bearing the banners of the existing political parties should come out in their true colours and not raise the dust of the issue of Jewish representation. We have no occasion for Isaac Greenbaums, nor have we any such in Montreal.—

SAMARITANS OBSERVE PASSOVER

The few remaining Samaritan families in Nablus and its vicinity went through the ceremony of offering the paschal lamb on Mount Gerizim, on Friday, April 15, since Passover came this year on Sunday. According to ancient Jewish custom, the lamb would have been offered, in such a case, on Saturday afternoon, but the Samaritans apparently hold that the offering should not be done on the Sabbath. It is reported that the Samaritan colony is making progress, several of its members having acquired land and their economic condition having greatly improved. Many Jewish tourists witnessed the ceremonies connected with the Passover observance by this old Jewish sect.

The Chicago Rabbinical Association has decided to set aside the week of May 21-27 as Jewish Book Week. It is urging its members to devote the Sabbath following Lag B'Omer to a sermon that will emphasize the vital need of quickening Jewish life through a more familiar acquaintance with first-grade literature by and about Jews. Broad-visioned Jews should respond to this appeal, which holds tremendous possibilities for a stronger realization on their part of their splendid past and vigorous present as manifested in literature. We now appeal to you to lend your aid to this movement which can be developed into a sturdy annual event. Et cetera, et cetera and et cetera again.—Like it? All the above langguage comes verbatim from the Bloch Publishing Company. The Bloch Publishing Company publishes Jewish books and is confident that the support it is giving the Jewish Book Week idea "will not be attributed to mere self-interest." It seeks an editorial in the REVIEW on the value of Jewish books to the Jewish people. All right, here it is. Now who is going to start a Read a Jewish Book Week and make it "a sturdy annual event"?

The average large Jewish community in contemplation of its problems must include that of finding fresh openings for the careers of Jewish young men and women. Anyway, something should be done with the Jewish affection for the professions of law and medicine. The external glamour which surrounds these professions has begun to thin out considerably in recent years under any eye open to economic realities and as far as the future is concerned the young person with the supposedly Jewish high regard for tachlis should look elsewhere for a highly satisfactory livelihood.

Men go into medicine for the same reason they go into the woollen business—to make a living. Of course, the medical profession carries with it more social distinction, but not unless a man's practice produces the means demanded by a place in society, so-called. If there is competition in business there is competition in medicine and it becomes sharper of late years. The rewards promised by the profession of medicine grow more and more meagre, even to the apparently very successful Jewish doctor with experience and highest qualifications. There may be plenty of room at the peak of the profession, but the blessings seem to have been diminished by intense competition.

There is frequently heard the plaint: too many Jewish lawyers, too many Jewish doctors, not enough practice to go around. The honest doctor must admit that the general level of medical incomes is dropping away from a high standard of living level while the number of doctors appears increasingly large, out of proportion to the Jewish community. The young man seeking a professional career should discover first what scope it offers. As far as the overcrowded legal and medical professions are concerned, he should regard them both as closed for a long time to the man who would live well by what he alone makes.

In a special cable to the New York "Times" Frederick Moore, its Shanghai correspondent, painted a sad, sad, depressing picture of the collapse of Christian missionary work in China. He tells of how churches and schools have been deserted and of the hostility which the missions, schools and hospitals share with the business houses. The majority of Nanking missionaries realize that their lives were saved, not for their value, but by shrapnel and high explosives. One missionary, called of the wisest by Moore, expressed the belief that ten years' absence from China would give the Chinese time to realize what they had lost. This prophesied absence is an admission that years of missionary work costing hundreds of millions of dollars have been thrown into the discard by the anti-Christian wave which spread like mad over the Yangtse valley. To the Christians this must seem a tragic loss. In the eyes of the Jews it appears a mighty warning to the Christians. The Jews, by the way, may have to shake off the missionary more than ever since the ungrateful Chinese have balked. Christian bigots have lots of money to spend over the exchange of some inferior religion for the Christian faith. Efforts being withdrawn from the Chinese, will the Jewish field in this country be considered heathenish enough to act as a good substitute? God forbid!

Yiddish: Our Literary Dominion

By ALTER BRODY

In the last decade and a half so many Jewish names have appeared on the American literary scene that they have agglutinated into a more or less well-defined Jewish province on some literary maps. As it contained critics of its own, tags were not found wanting for the group, on which were inscribed such mottoes such as "Hebraic Power," "Biblical Simplicity" and "Prophetic Passion"; and from time to time articles appear about the American Jewish poets and the American Jewish novel by the American Jewish critics. With which none of the poets or novelists in question takes exception—for what artist would go out of his way to deny that he had prophetic passion, Biblical simplicity, or power of whatever nationality? And so while there is a general awareness of the existence of another American Jewish literature in Yiddish, it has come to be accepted as a supplementary exhibit, of interest only to the specially inquisitive like objects in the family curio cabinet.

To this East Broadway can hardly be expected to subscribe. Just as once, in things communal, it regarded itself as the Sanhedrin of American Judea, and took no notice of self-appointed "Jewish Committees" from "Uptown," so at present, in things literary, it regards its Anglicized expatriates as outsiders, with no share in the body of Jewish culture, which, it insists, is and must be Yiddish. In the teeth of all the gloomy croaking about the inevitable demise of Yiddish, it nails its flag to the mast and maintains, in the words of the Yiddish critic Niger: "If Yiddish should ever become a language without children, the Jews will be children without a language for their Jewish thoughts and emotions."

Though I find my own portion in Israel thus questioned, I must confess this dictum sounds like good anthropology to me. Modern anthropology has long since torn to tatters the romantic mysticism of inherited racial traits, upon which a non-Yiddish Judaism must be built. There are omniscient critics who can tell at a glance the "Jewishness" of any poem or picture; but biochemistry has not as yet isolated "Jewish blood," and to date anthropology seems content with the conclusion that the inheritance of racial traits is solely through the non-biological machinery of the lingual-cultural-political-geographical organism called a nation. In the case of the Jews, who have for some eighteen centuries been without a geographical political reservoir for the preservation of racial traits, the lingual and religious conduits are the only ones left. In so far as contemporary Judea can be bounded at all, it is by the walls of the Ghetto and by the Yiddish language. When the Jew leaves the Ghetto and stops speaking Yiddish he loses definability. Certainly he cannot identify himself by a book that St. Paul, Martin Luther and the American Bible Society have made pretty nearly everybody's property. Not a very "broad" point of view, but how else can one explain the almost religious faith with which a considerable group of brilliant young writers, many of them products of

American schools and colleges, cling to an obscure German dialect which has been the vernacular of the bulk of the Jewish nation for a longer period than Hebrew?

Before its literary history, particularly in America, is comparatively brief. Here, in uncanny foreshortening, is a literature that has gone through its archaic, classic, romantic and decadent periods in less than half a century; some of whose early primitives are still alive and able to argue in the cafe with their ultimate decadent successors. Like American literature across the sea; but at the outset its new background stamped it with a character of its own.

This background, it must be admitted, was not as fertile as the one it left behind. The first Russo-Jewish writers, whom a wave of "back to the people" brought to Yiddish, may have had a poor opinion of it as a literary medium. But actually they started under circumstances as auspicious as any of the major European literatures. The thousand little Jewish towns thickly sown in the Pale formed a compact, continuous body—the nearest approach to a country that the Jews have had since they were driven out of Palestine. Though Jewish life there was urban, as in America, the wives and daughters of the artisans and petty tradesmen of the Pale, barred from the study of Hebrew and the law and kept in ignorance and submission by their husbands, grew up into a simple but imaginative peasantry—which is the life blood of all language. A woman's tongue, the scholars of the Ghetto called it contemptuously. But that's why it is so delightfully garrulous and wayward, sung rather than spoken, with rhythm for grammar; that's why the Yiddish folk-songs are almost all feminine—either plaintive lullabies or love songs full of the suppressed saltishness of the brief Ghetto girlhood. When the fathers of Yiddish literature took it in hand to make of it an up-to-date literary medium, the genius of the folk speech squirmed through their fingers and gave their work a whimsicality and extravaganza that was not in the realistic Russian models they had in mind.

In America the Yiddish writers were all too successful in that object. They brought with them a language already "refined" in Russia; and the intellectual proletariat of the East Side—the most serious in the world—was not in the mood for idle fancies. Their folk-songs were the sweat-shop lyrics of Rosenfeld and the socialistic verse of Winchefsky; and in prose what they wanted was "a slice of life." So did their sweethearts and fellow-workers, equally class-conscious and intellectual, whose highest recommendation was that "they understood life." There were their mothers and grandmothers, still incurably romantic under their bewigged piety. The orthodox journals ministered to them. To this day one may observe wizened matriarchs of the Ghetto bending solemnly over "An Absorbing Mystery of Life in the Royal Court" in an occasional idle hour. But the orthodox papers were aesthetically unimportant. The stage was set ideally for a school of remorseless realism, with an audience that did not wince at the rawest revelations. And so it came to pass that when Stephen Crane died, it was on the despised East Side, all unknown to America, that the gap between "The Red Badge of Courage" and "Sister Carrie" was filled—by Kobrin, Pinsky, Libin and others. Long before Sinclair Lewis founded the Babbitt-baiting school of literature, Kobrin wrote his novel, "Orah of the Beard," an analysis of a Brownsville Babbitt. Abraham Cahan, however, editor of the Forward, and thus foster-father of so much of Yiddish literature, had himself no confidence in the performance of the language; and the result was that "The Rise of David Levinsky," an integral part of Yiddish relation, was written in English—to startle an American public not yet accustomed to such work. When the war broke out, the local school was for a time almost overshadowed by distinguished refugees from Europe—Asch, Raisen, Hirschbein, Jonah Rosenfeld—but those these readily assimilated the American scene, they are only partially American. Asch is perhaps the most important figure in international Yiddish literature, and his American and European work exemplify both branches of the literature. In his earlier European career he produced "Motke the Vagabond," a novel as fanciful and as folk-flavoured as Synge's "The Playboy of the Western World." In America he wrote "Uncle Moses," merely a more powerful study of Babbittry than "Orah of the Beard."

American Yiddish literature is a chapter of "proletcult" that might interest Soviet aestheticians. Most of the Yiddish writers were factory workers and almost all their readers were; some of the younger writers still divide their time between literature and the shop. One result is that the East Side of Yiddish literature is hopelessly lacking in the "picturesqueness" that characterizes it in American fiction. It is not written for literary slummers. "O wad some power the giftie gie us, to see oorsel's as ithers see us" is not always sound artistically. The Yiddish writers fortunately did not have to take into account how others see us. Addressing a public to whom the East Side was not in itself interesting, and unable to delineate the Jewishness of their characters by the means of Yidgin English, they had to depend on psychology rather than spelling. Translations of Yiddish novels, therefore, seem surprisingly un-Jewish. Like Sherwood Anderson and others who strike bottom psychologically, they attract the accusation of "Russian." A representative series of translations would open up a panaroma of Jewish life that would be refreshing to an American public fed up on stage Jews. It would not give us the Jew, but perhaps Jews.

"Again we are 'seeing double'"

Several times since we started, some years back, to develop a perfect laundry service for "family wash" only, we have doubled the size of our plant and equipment. Demands for this service have grown to such an extent that we have just completed another doubling up and have now in operation one of the largest and most complete washing plants on the continent. We are always glad to take time on our phones to explain to you our five different ways of doing family wash—perhaps we can help you. Phone to-day.

In poetry Yiddish lagged for a long time behind its prose—repeating the phenomenon of nineteenth-century Russian literature, of a Byronic falsetto in verse existing side by side with a prose naturalism. Strange that the Yiddish poets, whose illiterate ancestors, the Badchans (wedding minstrels), had developed in Europe a balladry as lyrical as Elizabethan song, and whose descendants play such an important part in our "Negro" jazz, have themselves shown no capacity for rhythm beyond following the mechanics of meter. Only recently under the impact of the new American poetry did the younger Yiddish poetry find its natural voice. But of many talented younger poets Marnie-Laib is the only one combining naturalness with music.

It is the work of these younger men in prose as well as verse that is worth watching for its own sake and for the crucial drifts which are sweeping through it. As Yiddish life is moving out of the Ghetto mold which shaped it, the newer Yiddish literature is faithfully following even though it be to its death. Finding themselves in a surge of alien forces, the younger Yiddish writers are valiantly striving to master them and make them their own before they are mastered by them. So that on the covers of recent Yiddish books one deciphers in Hebrew lettering such titles as "Kentucky Poems" (by I. Schwartz), "New England" and "The Far West" (by Raboy), "America" (by Chester). Different books and different men, but what unites them all is the almost physical passion with which they hug the American landscape, its trees, the flowers, its animals, its people, and above all the soil itself; as if the suppressed soil hunger of two thousand years had suddenly overflowed in them and filled them with one thought: to root themselves into it, and become as native to it as the trees. This is less evident in a psychologist like Opatashu. But in "Races," his latest collection of stories, the Jew plays but a minor part, and the longest of them deals with a Southern lynching party. On the other hand, there is Lloomak, who solves the problem by taking refuge in a world "out of time and out of space." There in a land which has no name, peopled by characters without nationality, and governed by no law but that of beauty, he has created a series of idealized feminine types that remind one strangely of another refugee, Edgar Allen Poe. And Ignatov's characters, twisting in the Laocoon of their own individualism, though nominally Jewish, are no more Jewish than Strindberg's characters are Swedish.

Lavick seems to be almost the only one of them who can extract nourishment from the Ghetto and its traditions. His "Golem" is a dramatic poem of seventeenth-century caballism into whose symbolic tapestry is woven an intellectual panorama as vast as that of "Faust." A minor strand out of this complicated pattern is of special significance. When the Messiah, disguised as a beggar, reveals himself to the Rabbi and begs to be permitted to liberate the Jews from their suffering, the Rabbi sends him away, saying that the time has not come. The truth is that the Jew—and by that I mean the Ghetto Jew—had become so at home in the inner, other-worldly life which his history forced upon him that he feared to be redeemed from it and brought to earth. He had become a spiritual being who, in an inversion of the Antaean myth, died when he touched earth. This same disembodied spirit, for whom the outer world and its problems exist only as necessary evils, is the hero of Lavick's prose drama "Shmattas" (Rags), probably the only play in which local Yiddish drama achieves literature.

But the outer world is seeping in, and the quintessential spirit of the Ghetto, the distillation of two thousand years, is being diluted with other forces. The Luftmensch is being forced to descend and take root. Certainly in America. Kavick's "Golem" has been an event in contemporary Yiddish literature; but the tendency is all the other way. Most of the younger Yiddish writers are not concerned so much with interpreting the Jew to himself as with interpreting America to the Jew. There is the problem for the Yiddish critics who intrench themselves in the dictum that Yiddish will survive as the language of the Jewish thoughts and experiences of the race. But as it happens Americanization is the major Jewish experience just now. So that the Yiddish writers, faithfully voicing this experience, are becoming more and more American in thought and content; whereas among the nostalgic Jewish expatriates in American literature a sort of parlour Judaism is becoming increasingly fashionable. Which is more Jewish, a poem about the Kentucky mountaineer written in Yiddish or a novel of Jewish life written in English, is a problem which seems to be worrying the theorists on both sides.

In the meantime it seems a pity that the primitive energy of a folk speech as mobile as Yiddish cannot be brought over in all its poetic garrulity to enrich American literature and teach it to use its hands as all vigorous languages do. Perhaps when the last of the Yiddish writers are through Americanizing themselves they will rediscover Yiddish and recreate its rhythm and imagery for us in their new tongue. If they do that, they will only be paying a hitherto unpaid debt.

HAKOAH TO PLAY HERE

Hakoah soccer team will play in Toronto Victoria Day, May 24, against the best that Toronto can select. Game at Ulster Stadium, Greenwood and Gerrard Streets, kick-off at 10.30 a.m. Particulars from Thomas Holland, president, Toronto and District Football Association, Hargrave 1904; or Bernard Silverberg, 147 Dundas Street West, Adelaide 5347.

Hakoah is a sport club, which was started in Vienna some ten years ago for the purpose of giving those Jewish young men who were athletically inclined, an outlet for their talents. At first the organization was satisfied to remain local and limited itself to a few sports. Now it numbers over 5,000 members in the Vienna branch alone and goes in for soccer, swimming, fencing, wrestling and field sports generally. Under the guise of sport the Hakoah takes care of some three hundred children, waifs of Poland and Galicia. Swimming is taught to these unfortunate youngsters. Besides sport Hakoah encourages an orchestra of 132 pieces. This band of musicians has played all over Europe and has been an important agent in awakening the populace to the existence of Hakoah.

When you build your first home

WHILE you watch the growth, from blue-prints to reality, of your first home—only you can truly know the thrill. The joy of planning every detail, the pride of ownership in every board and brick; like but deeper than the thrill of the first circus, the first day of school, the first bank account.

You want the reality to be as perfect as the dream. "For plumbing," you say "Crane; if we can only afford it." You can. You need not hesitate. Though the Crane reputation for quality has created an impression of higher price, the fact is that a Crane installation rarely costs more.

In the wide variety of Crane fixtures are styles for the most modest as well as the most elaborate homes. No matter what you wish to pay, Crane can supply you with gracefully designed, dependable materials, embodying the Crane standard of quality. You can see the latest types of fixtures, valves, and fittings at the nearest Crane Exhibit Rooms. You will not be asked to buy, since Crane materials are sold only through responsible plumbing contractors.

Save Money by taking ICE in Early Spring

ICE costs a mere trifle. Food is expensive.

Experienced housewives know that variable temperature is bad for perishable food; that when the thermometer rises, milk rapidly gets stale and bacteria multiply a thousand-fold.

Even if the food does not spoil, it loses its crisp fresh flavor and much of its nutritive value.

SCOUT LEADER HELPS GIRL TO SAFETY

Joe Fisher, aged twenty years, of 6 Mount Noel Avenue, probably saved Anne Yaffey, aged 18, of 109 Euclid Avenue, from being trapped by a train on the C.N.R. bridge just north of Taylor's Bush on the Don river, shortly after five o'clock Sunday afternoon. Anne Yaffey, accompanied by Fisher and some eighteen other young people, were returning from a hike and had followed the course of a creek and later the Don river on their way back to the city. Miss Yaffey and two of the boys were a short distance behind the main party, having scrambled on to the long bridge spanning the stream, when a freight train suddenly shot around the curve. Miss Yaffey, who was some distance along the bridge, was taken by surprise and remained standing until Joe Fisher sprang to her side, grasped her by the hand and ran with her to the end of the bridge. The two of them dropped to safety just as the train rolled by them. The escape was so close that the driver of the engine pulled up to make sure that neither of them had been killed or injured.

Seen by The Star last night, Joe Fisher modestly claimed that he had done nothing out of the ordinary. "When the train came along I figured that the best plan to avoid trouble was to beat it back to the end of the bridge," he said. "We managed to get there before the train."

"Yes, I guess we had a narrow escape," said Miss Yaffey, "and every word that you have heard about the escape is quite true. The only thing I was nervous about the report was that it might needlessly alarm my father and mother."

Joe Fisher is assistant scoutmaster of the 60th Toronto Troop of Boy Scouts.

CELANESE PLANT AT DRUMMONDVILLE FAST NEARING COMPLETION

Weaving Machines Nearly All Set Up and Some Looms Already in Operation—Spinning Machines Will be ready by Fall—Market for Company's Products Continues Active.

Drummondville, Que., May 9.—Canadian Celanese, Limited, is rapidly rounding out its big plant here for the production of the well known products in Canada for which the British and American organizations of the same interests have become famous. Supplies of yarns and fabrics are still being imported from England to supply the Canadian trade, but by the fall it is expected the new Canadian plant will be independent of imported goods and able to supply all requirements of the trade from this plant.

The contractors report the completion of the weaving, dye and acetone recovery plants, the power house and other incidental structures. Staff houses already built make an impressive addition to the rapidly growing industrial community.

Installation of machinery is in progress, the weaving machines are being rapidly set up, while a number of looms are already in operation. The new rapid warp knitting machines will be producing in the near future. Spinning machines will be completed by the fall and it is confidently expected that by the end of the year the weaving plant will be turning out frabrics from yarns wholly manufactured here. Ground will be broken shortly for the acetate plant.

Meantime the market for Celanese products in Canada continues active and it is at present impossible to fill all orders owing to the overworked condition of the British and American plants in their efforts to take care of their own business and provide some portion of their output for export.

According to advices from London and New York, shares of the British and American companies have enjoyed phenomenal strength in the past few months. English shares have increased in value more than 100 per cent. in the past year and American shares have risen from 70 to over 190 in the last few months, present quotations being 193-195 for the common and 137-138 for the preferred stock of the American company.

New York advices state in connection with some recent financing carried out by American Cellulose that J. P. Morgan & Co. participated in the underwriting of a block of preferred and common shares in units of four preferred and one common at $450 per unit. In this manner this big financial house has acquired a direct interest in the company, it being one of the few industrial propositions in which they have become interested.

The American company's business is stated to be far in excess of last year's business, with current profits running at the rate of about $3,500,000 per annum. The plant is booked to capacity four months ahead.

In Canada, Nesbitt, Thomson & Company, Limited, placed Canadian Celanese, Limited, 7 per cent. Cumulative Participating Preferred Stock, carrying a bonus of Common, in conjunction with London banking interests who distributed the securities of the Company in Great Britain.

NORTHERN ONTARIO CANADA

Northern Ontario, now open for settlement at fifty cents per acre, contains millions of acres of the finest agricultural land in the world. Its resources in lumber, minerals, water, power, fish, game and scenery are immense. The land calls for men to cultivate it, and in return will give health, comfort and prosperity.

What settlers say of the soil, climate, farming and forest life, is told in a most attractive booklet issued under the direction of the Honourable John S. Martin, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario. Full instructions in regards to acquiring a title to these rich agricultural lands are also given.
